its results, one section of the Union is disrobed power; its voice in the national councils is weaken ed; its influence is reduced, and in deciding the affairs of the nation, it submits to the will of othe parts rather than controls them. With this change in the possession of the political power, the pre-eminence of the interests, the views and the feelings of the different sections of the Union are affected. Hence, the population and the representation arises chiefly at a crisis like the present, it becomes an object of from the fact that a State is entitled to one representand what objects it will aspire to achieve.
